Applied Doctorate in Arts and Humanities

As the world is becoming more interconnected, professionals who are skilled in cultural sensitivity, human behaviour, and interpersonal skills are in high demand across varied professional fields. The Applied Doctorate in Arts and Humanities is designed for researchers who want to dive deep into the exploration of culture, identity, language, and human values, and want to explore the deeper questions that shape societies. Pursuing a doctoral-level program in the field of arts and humanities opens up various career opportunities in strategic decision-making, policy development and organisational management. Researchers get the opportunity to conduct original research and address societal and cultural issues across countries and continents through our online doctorate program in arts and humanities.

What is an Applied Doctorate?

An Applied Doctorate is an advanced doctoral program that prepares professionals for specialised roles within their fields of expertise. Unlike PhDs, which are typically required for university teaching, an Applied Doctorate focuses on applied learning and practical expertise. Applied doctorate programs can also be called “practitioner” degrees, designed to empower professionals to leverage their industry insights to innovate and apply existing knowledge uniquely.

East Bridge University’s online Applied Doctorate programs emphasise independent research tailored to professional contexts. EBU’s Applied Doctorate acknowledges a professional’s extensive practical experience and expertise in specific areas. Hence, the doctoral research centres on applying existing theories and knowledge to enhance professional practice, preparing candidates for senior roles in the industry.

An Applied Doctorate will be the right choice for you if you want:

- ✓ Enhance your expertise in the functional disciplines of your profession.
- ✓ Engage in action research addressing real-world issues relevant to your current professional context.
- ✓ Offer practical solutions to contemporary challenges.
- ✓ Become an authoritative leader in your field of expertise.
- ✓ Facilitate constructive industry-wide improvements.
